Living Inquiries

Over the past couple of months, our ongoing tree exploration has sparked so much curiosity and imagination. In the BC Early Learning Framework (2019), living inquiries help us notice how children build connections with their environment, which aligns with my current grad school research. I've been exploring how speculative practices (imagining possibilities and alternative futures) can support children's thinking. Lately, this has shown up in our conversations as we debate the lives of trees, who might inhabit them, and what their futures could look like.
